```
/
adding a ? to a: array?<int> means that a can be null.
 */
method {:verify false} searchArray(a: array<int>, key: int) returns (found: bool, i: nat) // requires a≠null such a precondition is no longer needed in our version of Dagny ensures key in a[..] ⟺ found //a[..] is a as a sequence of integers. operator "in" is only on sequence ensures found ⟹ i < a.Length && a[i] == key
{
    i := a.Length;
    if a.Length == 0
    {
        found := false; //found and i are originally initialized with "garbage" value. because we didn't specify i's value if found is false // so we don't need to initialize i.
    }
    else
    {
        i,found := a.Length, false;
        while Guard(a,key,found,i) invariant Inv(a[..],key,found,i) decreases i
        {
            ProofOfLoopBody(a,key,found,i);
            i,found := i -1,UpdateFound(a,key,found,i);
        }
        StrengthenPostcondition(a[..],key,foumd.i);
    }
}
predicate method UpdateFound (a: array<int>,key: int, found: bool, i: nat)
{

}

lemma {:verify true} StrengthenPostcondition (a: array<int>, key: int, found: bool, i: nat) requires Inv(a[..],key,found,i) //sometimes order of preconds is important requires !Guard(a,key,found,i) ensures key in a[..] ⟺ found ensures found ⟹ i < a.Length & a[i] == key
    {
        //all this is probably not really needed, it was for our own convicing of the design - guard/inv.
        assert key in a[..] ⟺ found by { assert key in a[i..] ⟺ found; // from invraiant assert found || i == 0; // the negation of the guard
            if i == 0
            {
                assert a[i..] == a[0..] == a[..];
                assert key in a[..] ⟺ key in a[i..];
```

```
48              }
49              else
50              {
51                  assert found;
52                  assert key in a[..] by {
53                      assert key in a[i..]; //from Inv (when found is true)
54                      assert forall k :: k in a[i..] ⟹ k in a[i..];
55                  }
56
57              }
58          }
59          assert found ⟹ i < a.Length && a[i] == key by {
60              if found
61              {
62                  assert i < a.Length && a[i] == key; //from Inv when found is true
63              }
64              else
65              {
66                  assert false ⟹ i < a.Length && a[i] == key; // false implies everything
67              }
68
69          }
70      }
71
72  predicate method Guard(a: array<int>, key: int, found: bool, i: nat)
73  {
74      // !found && i≥0 this guard is problematic since if the key isn't in the array, we then do i = i-1 in the loop body and this is a type error 75      //since i is a natural number. so the guard isn't sufficient.
76      !found && i > 0
77  }
78  // not a method since it's called in specification (invriant of the loop).
79
80  predicate Inv(q: seq<int>, key: int, found: bool, i: nat)
81  {
82      |q| > 0 && i ≤ |q| &&
83      (key in q[i..] ⟺ found) && (found ⟹ i < |q| && q[i] == key)
84
85  }
```